

Andrzej Tadeusz Zielinski

MD. MS, Professor

Professor Emeritus of the National Institute of Public Health graduated from the Medical Academy (Medical School) in Warsaw and from the School of Public Health, State University of New York at Albany with degree of Master of Science in Epidemiology.

His scientific interests and professional activity concerns epidemiology of infectious disease, in particular the efficacy and safety of prophylactic vaccination. He is also interested in methods for determining causal relationships in epidemiology and assessment of the effectiveness of medical procedures and public health programs.

